

ENLIGHTENING WITH RANDOM COLOR IN ARCHITECTURE

JARED BRADSHAW

When observing the animal kingdom, countless colors are represented in its members and often appear to be very random. This random display of color can be very intriguing standing out from more organized and simple coloration. Colors are widely believed to have a purpose useful to the animal, which is not wrong, but some are actual incidental having no use at all. This project explores how these circumstances can influence architectural coloration.

